WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

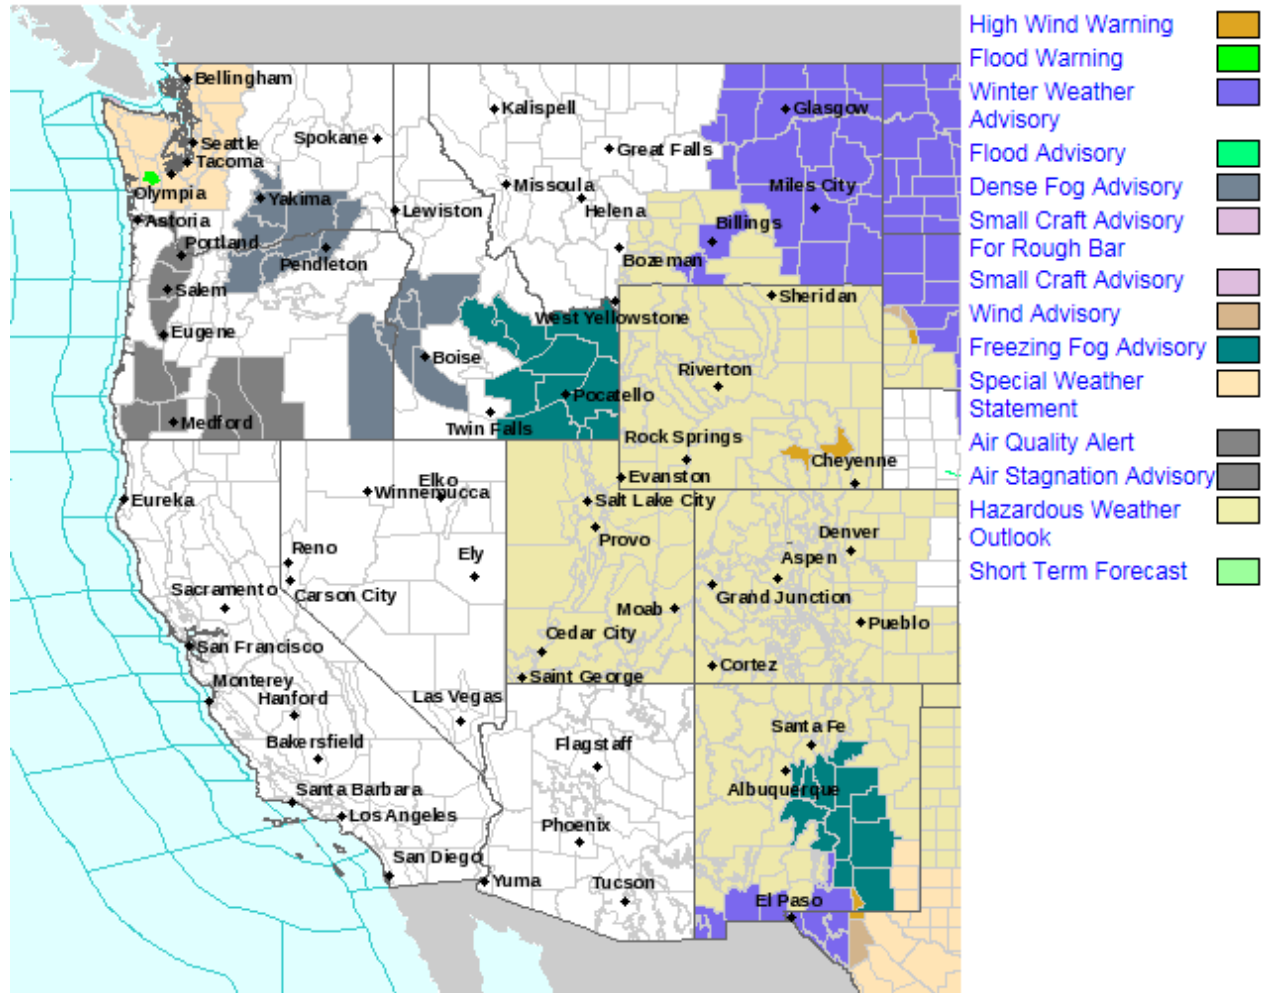

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure will remain over the Great Basin and will continue to dominate the weather this week with clear, dry and unseasonably warm conditions. Afternoon temperatures will be 7-14 degrees above normal in most areas. This high briefly gives way this weekend, as a pair of weakening Pacific weather disturbances brush the region with some clouds, but no precipitation. High pressure rebuilds off the coast early next week, bringing not only a return to unseasonably warm temperatures but also light to locally moderate offshore flow. Long range models continue to keep Northern California dry through at least the end of next week and with the next chance of any significant precipitation about 9-10 days away.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

There will be little change in the weather today as strong high pressure remains over California. Winds will be northeast to east 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 35 mph across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California. Maximum temperatures will be in the upper 50s and 60s over the mountains and mid 70s to mid 80s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 12% and 25%. A couple of weak Pacific troughs will move inland bringing a cooling trend and an increase in humidity to the region Thursday through this weekend. Little or no rainfall is expected with these troughs. High pressure will build into California causing slow warming and drying across the region early next week. Winds will be light Thursday through early next week.
